SLAVERY'S SHADOW: RACISM IN THE AMERICAN PSYCHE

The tragic history of slavery in America has left its mark on all, regardless of racial identity. Current racial tensions and group conflicts are surface reflections of social inequalities that are pervasive. The intergenerational transmission of trauma and prejudice are open wounds yet to heal. Therapists have an important role to play in meeting this challenge.

In this day-long program from the NCP Film & Mind Series, psychoanalytic and psychoanalytically oriented thinkers use clips from such films as Get on the Bus, The Butler, Django Unchained, 12 Years a Slave, and Fruitvale to visually illuminate the on-going impact of violence and fear on the American psyche.

To enhance our personal and clinical awareness as psychotherapists and psychoanalysts facilitated groups offer program participants an opportunity share and reflect on the day's experience.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

As a result of attending this course, participants should be able to

- Increase competency and insight in relating to patients/clients from diverse populations
- Explore the range of psychodynamics of racism such as projection, splitting, dehumanization, rage, resentment, and compliance/defiance
- Identify the influence of intergenerational transmission of "race" consciousness on members of diverse groups
- Recognize how film can reinforce or break racial stereotypes in the American psyche
- Apply increased awareness of racism and power dynamics in the patient and the therapist

ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

Thomas Brod, MD, Chair, Ronald Boutelle, Ph.D., John Lundgren, M.D., and Apurva Shah, M.D.

FACULTY

VERONICA D. ABNEY, PH.D., an ICP training and supervising analyst in private practice in Los Angeles and Santa Monica, is the 2015 Co-President of ICP.
